Does it create a new record for me? Does it pass data to my view? Or something else? A: This is the conventional syntax for creating a new record. It will create a new record, but it will not use an existing record and not create an id for it. From the book: On the other hand, if you invoke $form->add() to add a new item to a form, no model data will be used and no ID will be generated for the new record. This is because we want to treat the item as completely new. Q: Wordpress apache server - fast Caching I'm using apache server and i need to force cache PHP files and wordpress.php files. Is it possible to force cache just wordpress files? I need to cache not full website with static files. Is it possible? WordPress cannot read/write to the filesystem (although it could read the filesystem as a buffer of sorts). It is coded to be a dynamic process, and does not have its 82157476af
